the West End of London, so long has it been established, and so entirely has it fulfilled its undertakings. The etiquette of Mourning is continually changing in certain matters of detail, and a reliable guide to what may and what may not be worn under certain circumstances is almost necessary. That guide is to be found here. There are thousands of customers who deal habitually with Messrs. JAY without wearing mourning, this being one of the houses where may be seen the masterpieces of WORTH and PINGAT, though in subdued tints. Costumes, Mantles, Bonnets, Fichus, Dinner Dresses, Tea Gowns of sumptuous fabric are here to be found in every tasteful guise. The assortment of Mantles, whether trimmed with jet, passementerie or lace, is perhaps the largest and most certainly the richest in London, ranging as it does from the most elaborate of evening wraps to the simplest and plainest tailor-cut walking-jacket."
